Dashtaki: “Before I started my yogurt business, I was a lawyer at a top New York City law firm. In 2008, the financial crash happened and I was laid off. When it was gone, I realized that it wasn’t what was giving my life meaning.”

Description: Dashtaki sits on a couch to read.

Dashtaki: “Luckily, when I first started my career I met with financial advisors to prepare for a rainy day fund. Because I had that safety net, I was able to really explore and give myself the time for this happy accident to happen.”

Description: Dashtaki is shown making yogurt alongside her father.

Dashtaki: “After getting laid off, I used yogurt making as a way to spend quality time with my father. At our very, very first farmer’s market, we made $12. It cost me $85 to secure that booth. And that’s the moment I knew we were onto something.”

Description: A lineup of Dashtaki’s “White Moustache” yogurt brand is shown.

Dashtaki: “Being able to re-evaluate what I was passionate about changed my life. I’m incredibly grateful that I got the advice to save and put away money at the time that I did because I am living the fullest, most truest life I possibly can. I feel very lucky and fortunate to have found it.”
